Women take over Parliament

The face and gender of Parliament changed on March 8 as 338 young women between the ages of 18 and 23 filled the seats of the House of Commons to represent their riding.

The historic event, known as Daughters of the Vote, was organized by Equal Voice and sponsored by several unions including Unifor to promote the participation and involvement of women in politics.

Joining the Daughters of the Vote in Ottawa was a delegation of 22 Unifor women that came from across the country and represented different sectors, ages and identities.

Unifor women were invited to participate in the Daughters of the Vote event to be empowered by women’s representation.

Greeting the Unifor delegation was Lisa Kelly, Director Women’s...

Women make the union strong

Unifor women are helping to grow the union, as many active organizing campaigns represent the changing demographics of the workforce in Canada.

“Women are more likely to find themselves working in precarious employment and in sectors that are hard to organize,” said Roxanne Dubois, Unifor National Organizing Representative. “Our capacity to train and involve young women will prove to be essential in welcoming more women to our union.”

Jennifer Moreau, Vice-President of Unifor Local 2000, started organizing after disruption in the print and newspaper industries led to a reduction in jobs and the local’s membership.

With a need to diversify and strengthen the base of unionized work she reached out to workers in British Columbia’s animation, visual effects and game development industries.

“This is one of the most exciting, rewarding, high-stakes roles in the labour movement,” said Moreau. “Organizing has such a huge impact on people’s lives. It’s very fulfilling to know you’re helping workers in a meaningful, positive way.”

Samia Hashi, who helped organize Bell TV members in Scarborough, Ontario, is also actively encouraging union sisters to get involved. Hashi began as a workplace activist, went on to negotiate a first agreement with the bargaining committee, and now sits on the Ontario Young Workers’ Committee.

“Just do it! Start anywhere, whether it’s in your community, school or Local,” said Hashi. “We often second guess ourselves or don’t give ourselves enough credit for the strengths we do have and my advice is to eliminate that doubt and just get in there. The rest will come.”

Family Ed Program

The Family Ed Program is your chance to take your family on vacation to Unifor’s beautiful Centre in Port Elgin, on the shores of Lake Huron. Learn about our union and issues facing workers, while the kids enjoy recreational programs and teens participate in a specially designed social unionism program.

Apply to attend one of these sessions: July 30 to August 6, or August 6 to 13. Registration deadline is March 31.

Crown corporations.

“Brad Wall is mistaken if he thinks that the people of Saskatchewan will give up their cherished Crown corporations without a fight,” said Joie Warnock, Unifor Western Director.

Earlier in the week Unifor published an animated video that uses the fable of the Goose that Laid Golden Eggs to demonstrate how the Sask Party government’s handling of the Crowns threatens the future of the province. “Saskatchewan Crown corporations save people money every day and help fund hospitals and schools,” said Warnock. Despite explicitly promising to not privatize any of the Crowns during the spring 2016 election, the Sask Party introduced Bill 40 in October and the legislation’s sole purpose is to define the terms of Crown corporation sell-offs.

In response to Bill 40 and the attack on public services, Unifor launched the “Stand up for your Crowns” campaign. A petition and other materials are online at myCrowns.ca.
Department, Naureen Rizvi, Ontario Regional Director and Deb Tevitt, Assistant to the National President. In a pointed conversation filled with humour, Tevitt reminded the group that “nice women never changed history.” Kelly followed up by stressing the need for women’s involvement to push for change and demand more because “the system isn’t just broken, it was built this way, but together I know we can change it.”

To coincide with International Women’s Day, the Daughters of the Vote were called upon in Parliament to make a one minute speech. 30 women presented on issues ranging from electoral reform, suicide and mental health, sexual assault, the need for a living wage, access to post-secondary education, and there were several demands for Indigenous rights and improved funding for Aboriginal services. Some of the most pointed and powerful voices came from interventions that called for action on racism and Islamophobia.

Unifor women left Parliament feeling empowered and motivated by the powerful voices. Remarking on the speeches Rizvi said, “This is the hope for our future. It is just the beginning of what is to come. What’s important now is that Unifor women get active to make this kind of government possible.”

National President, Jerry Dias was also on hand to observe the event and participate in a He for She panel that followed the Daughters of the Vote in Parliament. Speaking to a packed room Dias said, “There is a need to change the politics of this country and to do that we need you – the women, and especially women in the union - to bring forward a bold vision.”

Major victory for Navistar workers

The long fight for severance money owed to workers at a closed Navistar plant in southwestern Ontario concluded on February 28 with an arbitrated decision awarding all entitled workers their outstanding payments under the Employment Standards Act.

“This is a significant victory for these workers and their families,” said Jerry Dias, National President of Unifor, which represents the workers. “It is simply appalling that a company as large as Navistar could be so heartless and attempt to deny its long-serving and dedicated workers the money they are legally owed. Navistar’s greed hurt many families for years as this fight continued and that is inexcusable.”

Production at the Navistar plant in Chatham stopped in June 2009, with the company announcing the plant’s permanent closure in July 2011. The company refused to pay its workers, members of Unifor Locals 35 and 127, the severance as required under Ontario law.

“There was never any question that Unifor would dedicate the resources needed to bring justice for these workers,” said Unifor National Secretary-Treasurer Bob Orr.

Unifor donates $146,000 to aid families fleeing abuse

Locals across the country helped to distribute a total of $146,000 to 73 shelters to aid families escaping domestic violence. Each shelter received a $2,000 donation, made possible by Unifor’s Social Justice Fund, as part of the union’s work in local communities to eradicate gender-based violence.

“These organizations provide desperately needed front-line aid to women and children, who often have nowhere else to turn,” said Mohamad Alsadi, Director, Human Rights and International Department. “The donations were timed to coincide with International Women’s Day to help draw attention to the need to address the social and economic inequality of women.”

The work of the union has been, and will continue to be, on the forefront of change to support women living with violence. In the workplace, bargaining committees have successfully negotiated support mechanisms and paid domestic violence leave into numerous collective agreements. Unifor’s ground breaking Women’s Advocate program also trains representatives to assist women with issues of harassment and abuse, and it aim is to create healthier workplaces, and safer communities.

“Violence against women is a pervasive problem that affects communities across Canada and to address the systemic issues at the root of inequality, real change is required at all levels of government,” said Jerry Dias, Unifor National President.

On a national level, Unifor is lobbying the federal government to enact paid domestic violence leave legislation and continues to champion the need for gender justice. For more information on the campaign and to sign the online petition to MPs, visit: unifor.org/women.
