Unifor fighting SaskTel privatization

After Conservative Premier Brad Wall openly mused about accepting offers for Saskatchewan’s public telecommunication company, SaskTel, Unifor locals sprung into action to fight any attempts to privatize Crown corporations.

Unifor is the largest union in Saskatchewan’s Crown corporation sector, representing thousands of workers at SaskTel, SaskWater, SaskPower, and SaskEnergy.

“Brad Wall is deeply mistaken if he thinks he has a mandate to privatize any portion of our Crown corporations,” said Joie Warnock, Unifor’s Western Director, referring to an explicit promise from Wall during the spring 2016 provincial election that Crown corporations would not be privatized.

TPP a threat to Canada

A rainy night and U.S. election results rolling in did not stop more than 250 people from turning out to a town hall to discuss the Trans-Pacific Partnership in Toronto on November 8.

“This deal is going to do some serious damage to our country,” Canadian Labour Congress President Hassan Yussuff warned the crowd.

Grocery store members make gains

Solidarity laid the foundation to ensure Unifor members employed at Dominion and Food Basics grocery stores made significant gains in recent contract talks.

“Achieving consistent improvements in retail is a priority for Unifor,” said Unifor National President Jerry Dias. “I’m proud of these bargaining committees for their work and commitment to better both wages and working conditions for all full-time and part-time grocery store members.”

In separate negotiations, members at Dominion stores in Newfoundland and Labrador, represented by Local 597, and Food Basic stores, Local 414, in 20 different Ontario communities led a hard

Local 1410 ratifies first contract

Members of the former Pepsico Employees’ Association overwhelmingly ratified their first contract as Unifor Local 1410. The local represents 163 members at the Calgary facility.

“We’re happy to welcome this group into the Unifor family,” said Joie Warnock, Unifor Western Director. “The bargaining committee demonstrated leadership and dedication, securing a strong deal despite uncertain economic times in Alberta.”

This is the first set of negotiations since the former Pepsico Beverages Employees’ Association merged with Unifor in April of 2015.

“We have an agreement that we’re all proud of, with wage gains and much stronger language regarding health and safety, job security and seniority rights,” said Val Walker, President of Unifor Local 1410.

Auto talks secured a brighter future

When Unifor formally opened bargaining with the Detroit Three automakers three months ago, only one thing seemed certain, the future of Canada’s industry was at stake.

Priorities for talks were established in early June, when 120 delegates passed resolutions calling for each company to commit to bring new products to Canada, and to secure investments for jobs.

Today, thanks to the collective efforts and determination of the union, the bargaining committees and the membership, the industry has a brighter future.

With the Detroit Three a total of $1.5 billion in investment was secured. Almost half was at Ford, with $613 million for a new engine at the Windsor Essex engine plant. For FCA, the Brampton Assembly Plant and the Etobicoke Casting Plant investment secured a rebuild and upgrades. At GM, $554 million was secured and Oshawa will now produce both cars and trucks.

These negotiations also brought jobs back to Canada. Unifor accomplished more in the last three months to secure auto’s footprint, and offer a brighter future for autoworkers, their families and local communities, than governments have in the last 10 years. In fact, for every job in an auto plant nine more are created in Canada’s economy.

The agreements reached make many important gains. Most of all the talks are an important reminder that with our collective power and unity there can be good jobs and a stable, secure future for generations to come. This is something we all can be proud of. To learn about the campaign visit unifor.org/AutoTalks16

Unifor says Wall is deliberately undermining SaskTel’s efficiency to foment dissatisfaction with the widely respected Crown corporation. On November 7, the company began shrinking the regional workforce in Moose Jaw.

“Brad Wall’s campaign against SaskTel is making families suffer,” said Warnock.

In response to the fierce backlash to full-scale privatization, the Wall government introduced Bill 40 on October 29. The Bill changes the definition of privatize in the Crown Corporation Public Ownership Act. If Bill 40 passes in 2017, up to 49 per cent of a Crown corporation can be sold off before triggering a public referendum on its privatization.

The incremental sale of Manitoba Telephone Service (MTS) was how Conservatives privatized the Crown corporation in the 1990s.

Earlier in the fall, Unifor ran radio ads exposing the folly of privatization in Regina, Saskatoon, and the other areas where cabinet ministers hold seats. The ads are still available to be shared online at Soundcloud.com/unifor

Print ads accompanied the launch of the radio spots and Unifor members leafleted Labour Day events and engaged with community members about the value of SaskTel and the other Crowns.

“Brad Wall isn’t fooling anyone. He’s preparing the groundwork to break an election promise and we’re going to stop him in his tracks,” said Warnock.

Unifor Locals in Saskatchewan are planning mobilizations for the winter, including when the legislature resumes in January. In the meantime, Unifor members across the country can send a letter to Saskatchewan Premier Brad Wall at: unifor.org/backoffbrad

The new agreements include annual wage increases for members regardless of their employment status. There is also a revised part-time wage grid, benefit enhancements and improved scheduling practices to provide better notice for shifts. In each round of talks Unifor helped to improve the lives of precarious low wage workers in the industry.

In supermarkets and other retail locations across Canada, Unifor represents more than 20,000 members, making our union one of the country’s largest for retail workers.

“The successes gained in each round of bargaining over the last year demonstrate why being in a union matters,” said Connor.

Unifor National President Jerry Dias is calling for strict measures to make it harder for police to put journalists under surveillance.

“It is too easy to spy on journalists and impede freedom of the press in Canada,” Dias said. “Journalists rely on their sources to reveal stories. When police tap the phones of journalists, it puts a chill on people being willing to talk to them.”

The federal and Quebec governments have been under pressure to take action since learning that Montreal police monitored the iPhone of La Presse columnist Patrick Lagacé; several other cases have recently come to light.

While the surveillance was set up under provisions of the Harper Government’s Bill C-51, the journalists involved were writing stories about the police themselves, and corruption in the Québec construction industry.

Unifor is calling on federal and provincial attorney’s general to immediately direct police forces and Crown Attorneys that warrants relating to the surveillance of journalists must always require the approval of the Attorney General before going to court and that a panel of federal judges must review each application.
A new contract for school bus drivers in Toronto and York Region, represented by Unifor Local 4268, sets new standards for the industry that could help avoid driver shortages if more widely adopted.

“For drivers who are members of Unifor in the Toronto and York Region, the job just got better,” said Local 4268 President, Debbie Montgomery.

The Local represents 320 drivers with First Student bus company and serves about 18,500 students in the public and Catholic school boards in those regions. Earlier this year, more than 2,600 students in Toronto were left stranded when school resumed due to driver shortage. The issue of shortage and retention became a main bargaining priority.

“No child should be left on a curb when a school bus should be picking them up. I’m proud of these drivers for working so incredibly hard to improve industry conditions and livelihoods,” said Unifor Assistant to the National Secretary-Treasurer Jenny Ahn.

The contract includes higher wages for drivers, and bus drivers getting paid for all the hours they are on duty, not just time when children are on the bus. Non-driving route tasks, previously paid a minimum wage of $11.42, will increase to $13.40 over the life of the agreement. All rates in the collective agreement will increase by between six and 17 per cent. As well, all paid time will be Employment Insurance accredited, allowing workers to qualify for EI benefits during lay off.
