Unifor activism saves Via Rail line 🚗

After a months-long campaign led by Unifor activists in New Brunswick, the federal government has agreed to provide funding to repair train tracks between Miramichi and Bathurst which will allow passenger rail service to continue in the Maritimes. The campaign to save passenger rail service was launched by Unifor and led by Local 4000, Local 100 and local union activists.

They worked tirelessly with mayors, municipal councils and the public to raise awareness about the necessity of this service. “The effects of abandoning this section of track would have had a devastating impact on so many communities along the ocean route,” said Jerry Dias, National President of Unifor.

In brief

Local 252, Nestle settle strike

After a one-week strike, members of Unifor Local 252 in Toronto have ratified a three-year collective agreement that includes wage increases and improvements to the pension plan.

The local was able to negotiate significant improvements in increasing the defined benefit pensions plan’s base rate for future and past service for all workers, plus a special increase for skilled trades in the pension plan.

There is a $500 bonus in the first year followed by 47-cent wage increases in the second and third years.

The union was also successful in eliminating agency workers, requiring the company to create about 44 full time jobs. Many agency workers will be hired in the full time positions.

The 365 members, who make such chocolate bars as Kit Kat and Aero, went on strike May 5. They had been in a legal strike position since May 3. The deal was ratified May 12.

The company had demanded an end to the defined benefit plan for 25 per cent of current employees and all future employees.

Workers locked out

Despite attempts by Unifor to keep contract talks going, workers at soap manufacturer JemPak GK Inc. in Oakville were locked out by the company May 15.

Security guards escorted the workers off the property today at around noon.

At issue is a company demand that the union representing the 22 workers, Unifor Local 132-O, agree that any new hires are not members of the union, that managers be able to do work currently done by union members and an end to seniority rights.

“We are ready to go back to work at any time, and to return to the bargaining table to work out a reasonable deal,” said Unifor Local 132-O President Brian Bartlett.

Unifor statement on mining disaster

Unifor, which represents miners in Canada, sends its deepest condolences and support to the families of miners killed and trapped in the recent mining disaster in Turkey.

The harrowing image of rescuers pulling bodies from the ground and lifting back blankets for desperate families to see the faces is a stark reminder of the need for strong safety laws across the mining industry.

Turkey has a history of mining deaths, but none in 20 years as deadly as the May 13 explosion at a coal mine in the western town of Soma – where more than 300 workers were killed.

Every miner and miner’s family knows what those families, and the entire community, are going through. Few mining families have not been touched by tragedy underground.

Protesters took to the streets in Ankara and Istanbul demanding strong action by their government to ensure the lessons of this disaster are not lost and mining is made safer in their country. Police responded with tear gas and water cannons.

Unifor stands with the protesters, and calls on the Turkish government to heed the advice of its people and bring in the strict laws that will prevent such tragedies in the future.

Mining may be dangerous work, but strong health and safety laws backed up by a government committed to protecting workers’ can prevent that danger from becoming disaster.

container truck drivers led to a joint action plan negotiated by Unifor with Port Metro Vancouver, the BC government, and the federal government.

Part of the action plan guaranteed a 12 per cent rate increase for drivers, something the plaintiff trucking companies aren’t willing to support. The companies argue that rate regulation is outside of federal jurisdiction.

“Unifor’s efforts brought labour peace and economic stability to the nation’s largest port,” said Gavin McGarrigle, Unifor’s BC area director. “This lawsuit is a reckless and ill-conceived move by a minority of trucking companies who don’t want to pay fair wages.”

The plan also secured higher reimbursement for drivers struck waiting in line at the port, something that terminal operators are resisting.

“It just shows these groups seem to prefer chaos over stability,” said McGarrigle.

Two locals win awards

Two Unifor locals took home top awards at the Canadian Association of Labour Media conference held recently in Montreal.

Local 222 in Oshawa was recognized as having the Best Website, Volunteer category for its efforts to provide a site for their members that provides plenty of content without being confusing to navigate.

“This Unifor local had a clear site design making it easy to access and discover content. It was apparent that they went above and beyond the stock design of the CMS software, and added many additional elements without making the site look junky,” the judges said.

Check out their web site at http://local222.ca.

In the Best Use of Social Media, Local 4451 in Stratford, Ontario, took the top award in the volunteer category for its Facebook page.

“The content posted to this page is all relevant to the local. Notices for local events are posted, news is shared that seems directly relevant to members, and there is almost always a well written comment to personalize the content that is shared,” the judges said.

Unifor supports Wayne Gates in re-election bid

Long-time former Unifor Local 199 president and former Niagara Falls City Councillor Wayne Gates is standing for re-election in the Niagara Falls riding in Ontario.

Gates won the seat in the February bye-election, bringing an NDP seat to the riding for the first time in 19 years.

He is now campaigning for re-election in the Ontario general election on June 12.

Gates is a strong proponent of “Buy Ontario” procurement policies, believing in government’s ability to spend public money locally to create meaningful employment.

As a local union leader, he was also a member of the CAW-General Motors Master Bargaining Committee for a number of rounds of challenging negotiations, securing work for the St. Catharines GM operations.

Gates has also been a vocal advocate of quality, universal, publicly funded health care and has been involved in a number of community organizations, including taking a lead role in the local United Way campaign.

Let temporary workers immigrate permanently

Raising wages for workers in the temporary foreign workers program and increasing the fees paid by companies is a good start, but does nothing to make the workers any less vulnerable, Unifor National President Jerry Dias says.

“This program takes advantage of the desperation of workers in other countries, forcing them to leave their families for jobs in Canada,” Dias said, adding that promises to crack down on abuses of the program don’t address its fundamental problems.

Dias called for the program to transition into one that allows the workers involved to stay in Canada permanently. Canada has a long and proud history of people coming here to build a better life for their families, said Dias.

“The difference is that they could build that life with their families. The workers in this program deserve the same opportunity,” Dias said. “If they are good enough to work here, they are good enough to live here with their families.”

Workers in the program can only stay in Canada as long as their work permits allow. They cannot bring their families with them, and most are barred from applying for citizenship. If they lose their jobs, they face being told to leave the country.

Dias called on the Harper government to allow any temporary foreign workers already in Canada, or who have granted to come, to apply to immigrate permanently.

“Part of making this fair is to ensure that the workers already involved with the program are treated fairly and given the opportunity to come to Canada permanently - with their families,” Dias said.

As well, Dias said, workers in the program should have full access to the same rights and protections in Canadian law as all workers in this country.
